This online course on project/programme planning offers a short but thorough introduction to key skills and methods for project management, focused on results-based project planning. It is spread over two modules, with the first module focusing on the "analysis stage" of planning - using different tools to analyse the situation prior to the design of a project. The second module focuses using the results of this analysis in the "design stage", where you will learn how to use the "logical framework" as a tool to structure and summarise the key aspects of a project that are necessary for it to be well managed. Successful completion of a final test at the end of the course leads to a certificate.

This is a redeveloped version of the course as the previous version was Flash-based. Enjoy!
